Biography and Professional Journey: 2017–2026

1. Professional Overview

Mesbah Hasin is a young Bangladeshi entrepreneur, digital marketing professional, and technology enthusiast born on 20 April 2007 in Dhaka, Bangladesh. He is the Co-Founder and Business Development Manager at ShortSwift Studio, where his professional interests include business development, brand development, creative services, digital marketing, and the growth of digital businesses.

His journey began with an interest in technology, computer games, and creative work. In August 2017, he discovered freelancing and started exploring ways to turn digital skills into professional opportunities. He initially learned website development before discovering that digital marketing better matched his personality and interests, particularly his enjoyment of meeting people, communicating with clients, and working across different industries.

Over the following years, his experience expanded into video editing, client projects, agency operations, brand development, e-commerce, website development, and software experimentation. His entrepreneurial journey has included several ventures, including TSY EditX, ShortSwift Studio, Shikhte Chaw, China Link BD, and Solexa. These ventures have had different purposes and outcomes, ranging from creative services and digital agency work to an educational platform concept and cross-border trading.

Mesbah's professional story also includes difficult experiences, including an attempted cheque scam, challenges with business partnerships, and projects that did not progress as planned. These experiences have influenced his understanding of client relationships, financial planning, teamwork, and business priorities.

Alongside his professional activities, he is pursuing a Diploma in Electronics Engineering at Dhaka Polytechnic Institute. His long-term vision is to combine entrepreneurship, technology, artificial intelligence, research, and creative leadership to build businesses and products that create lasting value.

2. Personal Background and Family

Mesbah Hasin was born on 20 April 2007 in Dhaka, Bangladesh.

He comes from a family he describes as decent and supportive. His father works in the private sector, his mother is a homemaker, and he has one younger sister.

Mesbah says his family trusts him and supports his ambitions. That encouragement matters to him as he balances his education with professional responsibilities and entrepreneurial interests.

From an early age, he was particularly interested in technology, computer games, and creative activities. He was also drawn to communication and the opportunity to meet people with different experiences and professional backgrounds.

These interests gradually became connected to his career choices. Digital marketing, business development, and entrepreneurship allowed him to combine technology with creativity and human interaction.

Mesbah wants to become successful and build a distinctive professional identity, but his ambition goes beyond personal recognition. He wants to create something different: businesses, digital products, and ideas that can develop beyond his individual efforts.

3. Educational Background

Shahin Cadet School and College, Dhaka

Mesbah completed his Junior School Certificate (JSC) at Shahin Cadet School and College in Dhaka.

Kushtia Technical School and College

He subsequently completed his Secondary School Certificate (SSC) at Kushtia Technical School and College.

Dhaka Polytechnic Institute

Mesbah is currently pursuing a Diploma in Electronics Engineering at Dhaka Polytechnic Institute. He belongs to the 2025–2026 academic session and, according to his latest information, is in the third semester.

His formal education is focused on electronics engineering, while his professional interests extend into digital business, marketing, software development, and AI.

He attends classes and lectures during the day and frequently works on his professional responsibilities at night. He has described dedicating substantial time to his agency and learning new skills, sometimes sleeping very little.

This routine reflects his commitment, but sustaining that commitment over the long term will also require effective time management and sufficient rest.

Mesbah does not envision his future as a choice between education and entrepreneurship. He wants to use his technical education alongside practical business experience, with the longer-term goal of building technology products and pursuing research.

4. The Beginning: Discovering Freelancing in August 2017

Mesbah's professional journey began before he established any business.

In August 2017, he first encountered the concept of freelancing. Curious about how people could work independently using digital skills, he began researching the subject and exploring possible career paths.

Website development was his first area of learning. He started studying how websites were created and how those skills could be used to complete work for clients.

However, he eventually realised that website development did not fully match his interests at that stage.

He was more interested in communicating with people, introducing businesses to audiences, and working with different industries and types of clients. That realisation led him towards digital marketing.

The change was important because it helped him identify the kind of professional work that suited him better. Rather than following a single technical path simply because he had started learning it, he explored alternatives and adjusted his direction.

His early experience established a pattern that would continue throughout his career: learning independently, experimenting with different opportunities, and trying to find practical ways to turn his interests into work.

5. 2018–2019: Learning and Exploring Digital Skills

During 2018 and 2019, Mesbah continued developing his understanding of the digital industry.

His early exposure to website development introduced him to the technical side of online work. His interest in marketing brought a different perspective, involving audiences, communication, business needs, and the relationships between companies and their customers.

He began to understand that digital work involved more than learning software. It also required an understanding of what clients wanted, how services could solve problems, and how to communicate value.

This period formed part of the foundation for his later involvement in digital marketing and business development.

His precise projects and achievements during these two years have not been fully documented, so they remain an early learning stage in his career rather than a period associated with unverified professional accomplishments.

6. TSY EditX: His First Agency Venture

Established: 9 November 2020

TSY EditX was an early creative venture in Mesbah's professional journey. He identifies 9 November 2020 as the date it began.

The venture focused exclusively on video editing. It was associated with two of towsif's close friends, Simi and Yeamin, with whom he was trying to establish a presence in the creative industry.

At the time, the team was still new to professional video editing and client work. They were learning how to operate in the industry while developing their skills and working towards gaining clients.

An early opportunity: Trololololo

One of the most meaningful opportunities for the young team was getting the chance to work with Trololololo, a large Facebook page.

For a team that was still new to the industry, this opportunity was memorable. It gave the venture an experience of working with a significant online content platform and represented an important moment in its early development.

The specific project details, performance results, and financial value have not been provided, so this milestone is best described as a meaningful early opportunity rather than assigned unsupported figures.

Why the original team separated

Over time, Simi and Yeamin became increasingly focused on their studies and could not dedicate enough time to the agency. As a result, the original team gradually broke apart.

Mesbah also describes a separate difficult experience involving editors he had trained. According to his account, a competitor encouraged two of those editors to leave by offering higher salaries. They later expressed interest in returning after approximately four months, but Mesbah no longer felt comfortable trusting them.

This experience highlighted the difficulties of building a team, retaining trained people, and maintaining continuity when important projects depend on a small number of contributors.

Mesbah is not certain whether TSY EditX should be considered officially closed or simply inactive. It is therefore most accurate to describe it as an early venture whose original team stopped working together, without assigning an unconfirmed formal closure date.

Despite its uncertain ending, TSY EditX was an important part of his development. It introduced him to creative business operations, collaboration, client work, and the challenges of managing people.

7. 2020–2021: First Earnings and a Serious Client Scam

During his early professional development, Mesbah moved from learning independently towards completing real client work.

He recalls receiving approximately US$20 from an early project in 2020. Although modest, this was a meaningful milestone because it connected his learning with paid work.

The experience showed him that skills acquired through self-directed learning could become a source of income. It also marked the beginning of his practical experience with client expectations and project delivery.

The attempted cheque scam

One of the most serious experiences of Mesbah's early career occurred when a client claimed that a cheque would be provided to someone residing in the United States.

Towsif had a relative living there who worked in the government sector, so he arranged for that relative to collect and deposit the cheque.

However, the relative's work commitments delayed the collection. The client began applying significant pressure to have the cheque collected and deposited as soon as possible. This unusual urgency raised suspicions.

At the time, towsif was no longer personally editing every video project. He generally relied on editors to complete editing work, but his editors were busy when the particular project arose. He therefore decided to handle the editing himself.

While working on the project, he noticed information that revealed the suspicious nature of the client's intentions.

Towsif realised that he might be dealing with a scam before the cheque was deposited. He immediately contacted his relative and told them not to deposit it.

Fortunately, his relative was only minutes away from making the deposit when the warning arrived.

According to towsif, the client continued pressuring the relative and began making threats after the deposit was stopped. The incident caused significant distress and left a lasting emotional impact on him.

His relative retained the cheque as a precaution in case the matter resurfaced.

Towsif expresses gratitude to Allah for the opportunity to recognise the warning signs before the situation progressed further.

What the experience taught him

The incident exposed the risks that can accompany remote client relationships, especially when a client requests unusual financial arrangements or applies excessive pressure.

It reinforced the importance of verifying payments, treating suspicious requests carefully, and protecting family members from becoming involved in questionable transactions.

It also became a difficult personal memory. Mesbah has said that the experience continued to affect him emotionally even after the immediate situation was stopped.

This part of his story illustrates the uncertainty that can accompany early freelancing. Professional growth does not always happen through successful projects; sometimes it also involves recognising danger and preventing a serious mistake.

8. Towsif Khan: A Mentor, Collaborator, and Important Figure in His Journey

Mesbah met Towsif Khan through a course that he joined to improve his connections and professional development.

They met in that learning environment and later began working together. Towsif became an important source of guidance as Mesbah developed his skills and learned how to approach professional work.

Mesbah credits him with helping him understand international client relationships, improve himself, and organise his work more effectively.

He also describes Towsif as someone who supported him during difficult periods and treated him like a brother.

Their professional history includes TSY EditX, the setbacks surrounding their earlier work, and their subsequent move towards ShortSwift Studio.

The relationship is significant in Mesbah's account because it represents both professional collaboration and personal trust. Rather than describing his journey as entirely solitary, he recognises the role of another person who offered guidance and worked alongside him.

The precise division of responsibilities between them at different stages has not been fully documented. Nevertheless, Mesbah consistently identifies Towsif's support as an important part of his development.

9. ShortSwift Studio: Co-Founder and Business Development Manager

Established: 2022

Following the difficult period associated with their earlier creative work, Mesbah and Towsif moved forward with a broader business direction.

In 2022, they established ShortSwift Studio, where Mesbah joined as Co-Founder and Business Development Manager.

His role is not that of a sole founder. He identifies himself as a co-founder who contributes to the development of the agency and its business direction.

ShortSwift Studio represents a progression from the narrower video-editing focus of TSY EditX towards a broader digital agency model.

Services and business direction

The agency's stated service areas include:

- Brand development and creative services
- Video editing and content production
- Website development and website modernisation
- Digital marketing and social media growth
- Search engine optimisation (SEO)
- Advertising management
- Chatbot services and personalised virtual assistants
- Digital strategy and business development

The agency aims to help businesses strengthen their digital presence, improve communication with customers, and use creative and digital services to support growth.

This direction reflects Mesbah's professional interests. His early experience with website development gave him exposure to digital technology, while his interest in communication and different industries drew him towards marketing and business development.

ShortSwift Studio brings these interests together in a business environment where creative work is connected to client requirements and commercial goals.

Mesbah's responsibilities

As Business Development Manager, Mesbah's stated professional responsibilities relate to developing the business, shaping its brand, managing creative projects, and helping connect the agency's services with potential and existing clients.

His work involves the business-facing side of agency operations, alongside his broader interests in branding, marketing, and digital growth.

He has also described experience leading a team of more than 12 people, although he did not personally recruit every member. This should be understood as team leadership experience rather than a claim that he built the entire team independently.

Working with national and international brands

Mesbah has described ShortSwift Studio as working with national and international brands. His wider commercial portfolio includes work involving organisations and brands such as the Bangladesh Navy and as well as other businesses and creative projects.

The exact scope of each engagement and his personal contribution should be described project by project when preparing a public portfolio. This avoids overstating his responsibilities or implying that every project was led or completed by him alone.

The agency's long-term objective is to become an internationally recognised creative and growth agency combining brand development, video editing, web development, and digital strategy.

10. Shikhte Chaw: An EdTech Idea Built Around an Educational Gap

Started: Early 2023

Shikhte Chaw, a name meaning approximately “Do you want to learn?”, was an educational technology concept developed by Mesbah.

The idea came from a problem he had personally experienced as a student in Bangladesh.

The problem he wanted to solve

Mesbah observed that students following different curricula could face very different challenges when searching for educational resources.

In particular, he identified difficulties for students following the Bangla curriculum taught through English. According to his experience, many available instructional resources and online lessons were presented in Bengali or used terminology that did not match the English-language terminology encountered by these students in their textbooks.

This created a gap between the language of the learning materials students used and the language of the resources available to help them understand those materials.

Mesbah had experienced this problem himself and wanted to build a platform specifically designed around the needs of students following this curriculum.

The intended platform

His vision extended beyond a single course or tutoring service. He wanted Shikhte Chaw to offer a broader educational platform incorporating courses, learning resources, and tutoring or related learning support.

The goal was to provide a more coherent learning experience for students who were not being adequately served by existing resources in the format they needed.

The idea reflected a different side of Mesbah's entrepreneurial interests. While ShortSwift Studio focused on businesses and digital growth, Shikhte Chaw was intended to address an educational problem.

It began with a specific user need rather than a general desire to create another digital platform.

Why it did not launch

Despite the ambition behind the idea, Shikhte Chaw did not reach a public launch. No finished website, course, or paid learning service was launched, and the venture did not reach the stage of serving learners through a released product.

Mesbah identifies financing as the main difficulty. He believed that a project of this scope required substantial investment, and the resources needed to develop it were not available.

He also referred to partnership difficulties in describing the venture's challenges, but the specific circumstances have not been documented in enough detail to make further claims.

Shikhte Chaw therefore remains an unlaunched EdTech venture rather than an operating educational company.

What it represented

Although the project did not launch, it demonstrates Mesbah's interest in identifying problems that people experience and designing a product around them.

It also exposed an important entrepreneurial lesson: a compelling idea does not automatically become a functioning business. Development requires financing, execution, planning, and the ability to turn an idea into a usable product.

For Mesbah, Shikhte Chaw became an early experience in thinking about a technology venture whose scope extended beyond his existing agency services.

11. Solexa: Building a Premium Sneaker Business

Opened: January 2025

Solexa is Mesbah's sneaker business, created around his interest in building a premium footwear brand for the Bangladeshi market.

The venture reflects his interest in branding, product sourcing, commerce, and business
